lease of life and a chance to crack one of his inimitable lokes. A few years later Rochefort, madelened by the artacks of his rival, challenged him to a duel a la mort, in which he proposed to stand at ten paces with pistols, only one of which should be loaded. M. de Cassagnac, for the only 'line in his life, refused to fight under such conditions.

Speaking of duels a la mort I remember hearing a blood-carding account at Renette's of an affair which the experts in the gallery are never fired of discussing. It happened some years and be-
